

MORE EVIDENCE AGAINST WILSON.

Circumstances That Corroborate Little Sunderland's Story.

For a while yesterday George Francis Train was the star of the trial of his former lecture-tour manager, Sylvester Franklin Wilson, charged with abducting Little Sunderland from Binghamton. G. F. Train is nearly 40. His complexion was as brown as the brown fuzzy suit and EVENING SUN hat that he wore. He had a miniature flower garden upon the lapel of his coat. In his broad right hand he bore more flowers, and in his left hand was a paper bag full of grapes. He seated himself at the lawyers' table and distributed this loose flowers that he had brought in, but kept the grapes to himself and ate them. He said that he had given up his usual seat beside Wilson because Wilson and Lawyer Howe were afraid that he would make some bad break that would injure Wilson's case with the Jury.

Benjamin D. McFadden, envelope manufacturer of 23 University place, testified that he was formerly advanced agent for Wilson's female baseball club. When the club was in Montreal Wilson instructed him to go to Utica, meet Little Sunderland and bring her to him. Wilson intended, he said, to star Little Sunderland in the "Little Countess" troupe. The witness learned at Utica that Little Sunderland had been arrested there, and sent her back to her father. The witness reported to Wilson, and Wilson telegraphed him to go to Albany. There Wilson instructed him to go to Binghamton and get Little Sunderland. The witness called at her home in Binghamton and met her father, who said that he would rather shoot his daughter than permit her to go away from home before she was of age. The witness returned to this city and made his report to Wilson.

Hattie Edwards, janitor of the flats at 2161 Seventh avenue, testified that in November she had seen Wilson there, and established himself in it with a Mrs. Maskell, her two daughters and Little Sunderland, who, he said, was his niece. Flossie Wilson, who was then 16, was a member of Wilson's "Little Countess" troupe, also came to live there.

Then Mrs. Maskell testified in corroborating Hattie Edwards. She, the witness, had had undue familiarity at times between Wilson and Little Sunderland.

Mrs. James W. Johnson, who occupied a room at Wilson's, testified that she heard Wilson talking improperly to Little Sunderland. She also heard him order her to get out of the Charles and Delaney street precincts.

Mr. Barnett's Exciting Drive.

Aaron Barnett of 705 Madison avenue took his wife for a drive on Thursday afternoon. At Seventh avenue and 144th street they met two wagons racing. The horses attached to Mr. Barnett's victoria became frightened, and the high horse succeeded in getting one hind leg over the track. The coachman, Thomas Jackson, broke a finger of his left hand in trying to rein the horses in. Then he leaned forward and attempted to unthatch the traces. He was thrown from the box. The horses started on a gallop and the carriage, Mr. Barnett's, which was old, clattered to the box and picked up the reins. The horses passed 145th street and into the Bronx. They were then stopped in their tracks by the female baseball girls nine more in the field, particularly as to the length. She looked down at the skirt of her dress flannel dress and said:

"The skirt was not any shorter than this one that I have."

The skirt just cleared the top of her boots. Mrs. Barnett, who is 368, then avowed that she let a suite of rooms in No. 2161 to Wilson. He lived there alone, but had other suspicious circumstances about these visits. Mrs. Sophia Lyons of 205 West Thirty-first street, another of Wilson's tenants, testified that in November last Wilson paid Little Sunderland $200 a week, and two weeks ago he took Little to the theatre, he said, keeping her all night.

Mr. McIntyre recalled the little complainant, Little Sunderland, who, he said, had come to him with the story that the female baseball girls nine more in the field, particularly as to the length. She looked down at the skirt of her flannel dress and said:

"The skirt was not any shorter than this one that I have."
